INTRODUCTION

The compiler has endeavored to gather together in one place as many statistics as possible related to the membership of the church and the enrollment, the personnel, the graduates, and the assets of schools, covering the years 1853 - 1987. This has been complicated by the fact that reports, in the best of times, are not complete, and are often filled out incorrectly or not at all. The fact is that should another person compile these figures they would, in some cases, be different from those found in this book. The figures have been abstracted from opening and closing General Conference Department of Education reports, from General Conference Annual Statistical Reports, from reports appearing in church periodicals, from books, and from other similar sources. Organizations and church memberships listed are only those which have had Seventh-day Adventist schools.

It is obvious that were the compiler to travel over the world, checking the figures in individual organizations and institutions, they would be more complete and accurate.

The user of these statistics must use his own judgment as he goes through these statistics, taking into consideration the following facts and problems:

1. Before the early 1900's very few statistics were kept. Information about schools between 1853 and 1901 were gleaned from such sources as articles in the Review and Herald, General Conference Bulletins, Year Books, school bulletins, incidental reports and materials written by others (who may also have made mistakes).
2. There are uncertainties as to whether certain figures have been included. Some figures may have been reported twice, such as intermediate schools having been reported with secondary schools, and then also with elementary schools. Secondary and elementary schools may or may not have been reported in the local fields where they belonged. Those who supplied the reports often had differing interpretations on what were colleges, secondary schools and elementary schools as well as on other requested information.
3. Often fields with schools, and schools themselves, did not report. Had all reported, the figures would be much larger.
4. Organizations and schools that did report, often often did not give figures for schools, teachers, or graduates. At times a total was given, but there was no breakdown, and the totals within the fields may not match the Totals column. So do not use your calculator to make sure that the additions are correct.
5. The figures often make no sense. They are inexact.
  - a. Often figures for one year are repeated for several ensuing years.
  - b. The statistics are illogical, i.e. the number of acres and buildings extant during a given period generally remain the same but this is not revealed by the figures. -
  - c. The number of teachers for a given for a field are frequently inexact, for example, 25 teachers for 38 schools!
  - d. There are great changes in enrollment and the number of teachers from one year to another.
  - e. It is possible that one schools's figures may have been repeated in other places, i.e. intermediate schools being repeated in the secondary school listings.
6. This is obvious in comparing figures for enrollments, personnel, graduates, and assets with previous years. Often the figures are rounded out, omitted completely or repeated year after year. Often students and personnel listed under "Tertiary" or "secondary" include students from other educational levels. Individuals who prepared the reports often had different concepts, and the compiler "sells them at the same price that he purchased them," or as Dr. Dyre

- Dyresen, former statistician at Andrews University expressed it: GIGO, (Garbage In, Garbage Out).
7. Where different figures were found for the same year the compiler has used the higher figure, reasoning that it may be the highest cumulative figure. Closing reports were used, but if the only information available was from an opening report, it was used. This has not been indicated in these statistics. The figures recorded are generally "at least this." The truth would give much higher figures on most areas.
  8. Blanks indicate one of two things: (a) Nothing was reported, and (b) the information was not available to the compiler without doing much more extensive research. This material has been placed in a computer, so should the reader wish to make a correction or an addition, it may be included to make a future edition more perfect.
  9. At times the totals in the personnel section are more than the addition of the tertiary, secondary and elementary columns, for the total may also include some other unlisted personnel. Where only one figure is given for personnel, it will often be found listed on the higher institutional level, although at times they will be found between the two columns.
  10. The figures for graduates entering the work are not included in the statistics of organizations. At times they are included in individual school statistics, but at often misinterpreted (possible giving the total number of graduates of a school in denominational work in a given year.
  11. Cent figures have been rounded to the nearest dollar. Notice that the Fixed Assets, where given, may only be for elementary schools. At times Current Assets were recorded, or were included with the Fixed Assets. An asterisk (*) before the figure indicates national currency.
  12. There may be typographical errors, and some numbers may have been copied wrongly. The compiler did this work over a period of around twenty years, and did not spend the enormous time that would be required to recheck the figures after copying them.
  13. College information is generally found listed in the corresponding union statistics, not in the local field where they are located. In most cases, post-graduate students have been listed in the tertiary column, while worker training and intermediate school students have been included in the secondary column. Mission schools in early days were often counted as secondary schools.

Order Follows:

1. Each section is in alphabetical order, with the name of each field or institution as found in the 1987 Year Book. Changes in names throughout the years have generally been included with corresponding statistics.
2. The statistics are first arranged according to divisions.
3. Unions are then listed in a given division.
4. Conferences/missions/fields/sections/churches/delegations are then listed within each union.
5. Schools are listed at the close of each union and its fields.
